The Division of Student Affairs’ mission is to enhance the learning environment for students at the University of Georgia. We accomplish this by stimulating the learning process, integrating the in-class and out-of-class experiences, promoting an environment conducive to growth and discovery, and facilitating intellectual, spiritual, social, occupational, physical, cultural and emotional development.
Welcome to the 2013-2014 Student Affairs Annual Report!

This document represents the accomplishments of the UGA Student Affairs division during the 2013-2014 academic year.

In reviewing the highlights of the 19 departments in Student Affairs, I hope you will appreciate the depth and diversity of the division’s programs and services for UGA students and community members. We are deeply committed to providing an outstanding student experience for all UGA students and fostering a connected, inclusive learning community.

As I reflect on my first year as vice president, I strongly believe that the division’s work throughout this year has indeed fostered a stronger, more vibrant learning community and enhanced UGA greatly. From new academic and campus partnerships to enhanced facilities and programs to record fundraising, it has been an amazing year for Student Affairs. I am grateful for the incredibly talented and resourceful Student Affairs staff, whose efforts are represented in this report.

We value your contribution and partnership on behalf of our very deserving students. I look forward to continuing our commitment to enhance the learning environment for students at UGA.

Best wishes for a wonderful upcoming year.

Be well,

Victor K. Wilson

About the Cover

The School of Athens, Georgia, by Michael Ross, was specifically designed for the waiting area for the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs. Rather than portraying a specific moment in time, it is an allegory about student life at the University of Georgia’s campus in Athens. Vignettes inside the painting convey themes of scholastic ambition and personal challenge, friendship and partnership, exercise, recreation and the bountiful landscapes and handsome architecture of the university’s campus. Art students and professors modeled for the various figures.

The scene is an amalgamation of views rather than an actual vantage point: the central staircase is inspired by the one that rises from Baldwin Street at Sanford Drive, while Park Hall was moved over to feature prominently at the summit. Through the magnolia we can see the Forestry Resources Building, and in the distance, the Boyd Graduate Studies Building, and faintly the Biological Sciences Building. The staircase and two professors at the top reference the Renaissance painter Raphael’s great fresco The School of Athens, which depicts an imaginary reunion of prominent ancient Greek philosophers.

As in many classical figure paintings, the action is formed along the stable compositional structure of a pyramid. The foreground sidewalk forms the base, while key figures, the staircase and the finials of the brick wall lead diagonally upward towards the pyramid’s apex at the pediment and tower of Park Hall.

Symbolically, the painting begins on the bottom right, where the tour guide in the red shirt shows two prospective students what life on campus might hold. They enter the scene on the right and look upward to the pinnacle of the institution and all the effort it will take to get there. Along that path, we see figures like the runner working hard to move upward. Near the top, two professors argue a point: They are direct quotations from Raphael’s Plato and Aristotle in his School of Athens. Plato points upwards towards an ideal; Aristotle downwards towards earthly realms. They may never agree, but critical thinking, fruitful argumentation, and respect for multiple viewpoints are core values of a university. Along the staircase, two groups of students stop to read, play chess and enjoy each other’s company. Another student looks up to take it all in while walking his unruly puppy, a guide dog in training.
